Golden Group International Outlines Menstrual Access Priorities for Schools and College Campuses

September 15, 2026

Town of Patterson, New York - September 15, 2026 -
Golden Group International, a U.S. manufacturer of commercial-grade menstrual product dispensers, receptacles, and disposal systems, has outlined practical guidance to help schools and college campuses maintain reliable menstrual product access throughout the academic year. The company's durable, low-maintenance solutions are designed for schools, campuses, and other institutional facilities.

Throughout the academic year, reliable menstrual product access depends on more than stocking supplies. Free-vend dispensing, dependable refill schedules, sufficient disposal capacity, accessible installation, and routine maintenance each contribute to systems that function reliably for students and facilities teams.

Free-vend dispensing removes the need for coins or tokens, allowing students to obtain products without cost or delay. The company emphasizes that dispensers perform reliably only when paired with a defined refill schedule, so units do not sit empty during peak periods. Golden Group International's dispensers are designed to use standard, non-proprietary menstrual product refills, giving schools greater flexibility in sourcing supplies and helping simplify long-term program management. Adequate disposal capacity within restrooms helps reduce overflow and supports hygiene standards, while installation at accessible heights and locations helps campuses meet accessibility expectations.

Routine maintenance rounds out the list. Golden Group International points to periodic inspection of dispensers, receptacles, and mounting hardware as a step that helps prevent disruptions during the school year. The company has published a school dispenser maintenance checklist and a menstrual product dispenser guide covering legislation and accessibility, both intended to help facilities staff plan procurement, installation, and ongoing upkeep.

"Restrooms tend to get evaluated after a problem appears, but menstrual access works best when the planning happens before issues arise," said Jackie Transue, President of Golden Group International. "Free-vend dispensing, a set refill schedule, and adequate disposal capacity are the components that help keep a program running reliably throughout the academic year."

The company adds that requirements differ by jurisdiction, which affects how schools approach product selection and placement. Some states and districts mandate free products in specified grade levels or building types, while others leave decisions to individual institutions. Because of this variation, Golden Group International encourages procurement teams to confirm local rules alongside their equipment and refill plans.

"State and district rules are not uniform, so what satisfies one campus may fall short at another," Transue said. "Reviewing those requirements early, then matching dispensers and disposal to actual restroom traffic, gives schools a system they can maintain rather than one they have to fix."

Golden Group International frames menstrual care for schools as a facilities function that benefits from the same planning applied to other restroom infrastructure. By addressing dispensing, refills, disposal, accessibility, and maintenance together, campuses can reduce gaps in access and establish systems designed to perform reliably throughout the school year.

Golden Group International, Ltd. is a U.S. manufacturer of commercial-grade menstrual product dispensers, receptacles, and disposal systems for schools, campuses, commercial facilities, and other institutional environments. The company also distributes complementary menstrual care, hygiene and facility products from other manufacturers.
