Grace Point Treatment Center Earns Joint Commission Accreditation,The Gold Standard for Rehab Accreditation

April 27, 2026

FORT LAUDERDALE, FL - April 27, 2026 -

Grace Point Treatment Center, a Fort Lauderdale-based addiction treatment facility, has received accreditation from The Joint Commission, the nation's most widely recognized independent authority on healthcare quality and patient safety. The accreditation, formally known as JCAHO accreditation, follows a rigorous evaluation of the center's clinical operations, staff credentials, treatment outcomes, and patient safety protocols. This is a process that many behavioral health facilities in Florida do not complete or pass.

The development marks a significant milestone for the center, which has built its clinical model around individualized, trauma-informed care for adults confronting alcohol and drug addiction. Grace Point's clinical team detailed what the accreditation means for patients and families in a resource published this month, noting that JCAHO status provides a verifiable, third-party assurance of clinical excellence that goes beyond standard state licensing.

The Joint Commission's evaluation process assesses whether a treatment center meets national benchmarks across multiple domains, including ethical standards, care coordination, documentation practices, and patient rights. For families in crisis, often conducting searches under emotional and time pressure, JCAHO accreditation serves as an objective signal that a facility has been held accountable to measurable standards by an external body. It is a distinction that carries weight with insurers, referring physicians, and healthcare professionals nationwide.

Fort Lauderdale has long been recognized as one of the most concentrated regions in the country for addiction treatment services, a reality shaped in part by Florida's historically high rates of opioid and alcohol-related hospitalizations. Broward County has seen sustained demand for structured, clinically supervised care, and the availability of treatment options in the area has drawn individuals from across the United States seeking recovery in a warm-weather environment with access to strong aftercare networks. Within that landscape, the quality of care varies considerably from one provider to the next. Accreditation from a nationally recognized body such as The Joint Commission gives prospective patients and their families a concrete, evidence-based way to evaluate which facilities meet a verifiable standard of care before making one of the most consequential decisions of their lives.

Grace Point operates a full continuum of care that guides patients through each clinical phase of recovery. Gracepoint partners with high-quality detox facilities for those who need a supervised withdrawal process. The Fort Lauderdale treatment facility then provides a Partial Hospitalization Program (PHP) for those who need intensive, structured therapeutic support during the day. From there, patients transition to Intensive Outpatient Programming (IOP), which maintains clinical structure while allowing individuals to begin reintegrating into daily life. A stabilization track is also available for individuals in acute crisis who require immediate, short-term intervention before entering a longer-term recovery program.

The therapeutic model at Grace Point draws from evidence-based approaches, including individual therapy, group therapy, and family therapy, with particular emphasis on treating co-occurring trauma. The program also maintains a dedicated track for adult children of alcoholics, recognizing the intergenerational dimension of substance use disorders that many facilities overlook.

The center operates in a small-group setting located minutes from Fort Lauderdale's coastline and accepts most major insurance carriers, including Aetna, Cigna, Blue Cross Blue Shield, Anthem, and Florida Blue, thereby reducing a common barrier to accessing care at accredited facilities.

In a region where behavioral health centers operate in large numbers but with varying degrees of clinical accountability, JCAHO accreditation places Grace Point among a narrower category of providers. The accreditation requires ongoing compliance and periodic re-evaluation, meaning patients and families can rely on the designation as a sustained measure of quality rather than a one-time credential.

Grace Point Treatment Center serves adults across the greater Broward County area, including Fort Lauderdale, Pompano Beach, Hollywood, Oakland Park, and Lauderdale-by-the-Sea.
